10. Roman snail
The snail moves by contracting the muscles of its body, helped by the mucus it produces. Now you know why a snail always leaves a trail of slime!

8. Pale-throated sloth
The sloth is the world's slowest mammal. Sloths don't hurry so that they can save energy. Their favourite activities are sleeping and eating. When they do have to move, they do so very slowly.

7. Emperor penguin
Penguins may be clumsy on land, but they are anything but in the water. Body shape, webbed feet, wings acting as fins – all these things provide them with speed and elegance they lack on land.

6. Floundered basilisk
The basilisk has a superpower that will surprise you: it is small and light but moves so fast for one of its size that it can run across water.

5. Dragonflies
Dragonflies are the champion fliers of the insect world. Not only are they super-quick, but they are also very successful hunters who catch their prey in six of cases.

4. Racehorse
Racehorses are specially bred and trained to reach the highest possible speed. But as you can see from our standings, this is not nearly enough to place them among the fastest animals.

3. Cheetah
No one runs faster than the cheetah. Built from his light, slender body to built for running at high speed, and his long tail helps with balance.

2. Black marlin
The black marlin is known to be one of the world's fastest fish. It may even be the very fastest. Its closest competitor is its relative the sailfish, which is of very similar appearance.

1. Peregrine falcon
The falcon hunts in an interesting way. It begins by flying high above its prey. Then it goes into a steep fall – which is when this incredible speed was measured.

MEDICINE OF THE ISLAMIC WORLD

While in medieval Europe medicine was still finding its way, in the Islamic world, influenced by the traditions of Greece, Persia, Assyria and India, it had reached a very high level. The period between the 8th and 13th centuries is regarded as Islamic medicine's golden age. At Baghdad's House of Wisdom, which originated in the 9th century, researchers of works by great scholars of Antiquity were ptolemy and, Islamic physicians would continue to build on their knowledge and insight. So it was that in the Middle Ages, only the Islamic world had a unified system of medicine.

BALANCE AGAIN

The human body contains four humours: blood, phlegm, black bile, yellow bile. These four fluids correspond to the four qualities of coldness, dryness, warmth and moisture, and also to the four seasons. The proportions in which the bodily humours were present in each individual was determined by their overall health. A person determined to remain healthy—i.e. in balance—kept a healthy lifestyle with the right ratios of wakefulness and sleep, activity and rest.

SINGULARITY

You will hardly be surprised to learn that Islamic physicians came up with the idea of the singularity of these proportions in the body of each individual. What made one person with the balance they desire may not be right for others. Age is a factor, as are surroundings, natural conditions and lifestyle.

LIFESTYLE

As anaesthesia, a strict ban on autopsies was observed in Arab countries. Anatomical knowledge was based on the writings of ancient Greek scholars. Arab physicians therefore clearly preferred not to interfere with the human body. First and foremost, they suggested a change in lifestyle—dietary modification, exercise, relaxation, increased hygiene and, last but not least, music therapy. If none of this helped, then drugs, fables, vein tapping and only when even these practices proved ineffective did surgery come into play.

SURGICAL PERFECTION

Although surgery wasn't a popular field of medicine even in the Islamic world before the 10th century most of its practitioners were unqualified. Islamic surgeons managed even complicated operations. In the 13th century, they operated successfully on cataracts of the eye, to say nothing of removing tumours. They used anaesthesia and complicated techniques for the stitching of wounds.

Common chicory

(Cichorium intybus)

Past and present: Its blue flowers are like the eyes of blue-eyed girls waiting for their beloved to come home from war. Some don't stay the course, and they wither. 'The one who waits' such is the name of this flower in Slavonic languages. Perhaps for this reason, chicory is sometimes referred to as a sorrowful flower. It is also a symbol of eternal love. It thrives all over the world, except in colder regions.

Many legends and superstitions relate to chicory. Not everywhere was it an expression of sorrow. Indeed, in eastern lands of the ancient world it was considered a magical bearer of beauty. The Egyptians regarded it as a panacea. Our ancestors also believed that whoever should pluck it on Walpurgis Night would become invisible. On the Feast of Saints Peter and Paul, a person desirous of love or friendship should touch the object of their desire with the flower.

Chicory of the aster (Asteraceae) family is prized for its medicinal properties as well as its beauty. Each part of it will benefit the human body. It is said to have antiparasitic effects. It supports the workings of the liver, gallbladder and metabolism, is a mild diuretic, and lowers blood sugar levels. It works against constipation and generally improves digestion. Powdered chicory root is used as a coffee substitute.
