Why you're allowed to (and must!) look after yourself

Life with children can quickly feel like an endless to-do list, where you're always a step behind. It's no surprise that among all that craziness, we can easily lose sight of something very, very important: ourselves. If you want to stand up to the challenges of everyday life, you have to look after yourself too – after all, you recharge your phone every day, so why not yourself?

The main ingredients of self-love are: making sure you take some time out, stop being hard on yourself, and stand up for yourself and your needs. That way, you can not only recharge your battery, but even build up long-term inner resources that'll help you navigate the rest of your life. And the best thing about it? You'll be demonstrating to your kids the importance of self-love – a lesson which will help them in later life too.

With lots of exercises and reflections, mindfulness and meditation coach Mascha Blankschyn invites you to:

- Find yourself and find inner peace
- Question fixed thought patterns and social expectations
- Say no and set boundaries
- Include everyday acts of self-love in your life
- Create loving relationships and show your children the importance of self-love

FROM A SKETCH TO A MINI-ME WITH VARIOUS BACKGROUND AND SCENERY IDEAS

↳ KÖRPERPOSEN

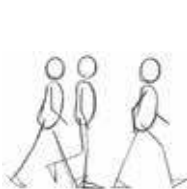

Die erste Frage, die du dir stellst ist: Was tut meine Papierfigur? Welche Geschichte möchte ich erzählen? Posiert sie vor der Kamera oder beobachtet du sie gerade bei irgendeinem. Daraus ergibt sich ihre Pose, ihr Haltung.

Nicht jede Pose lässt sich dabei problemlos frei Hand zeichnen. Hilfreich sind Fotos oder du posierst selbst vor dem Spiegel. Die erste Skizze ist sehr einfach und die Figur auf die Grundformen reduziert. So konzentrierst du dich auf die Körperhaltung und die Proportionen.

Setzt sich das Papierfräulein in Bewegung, scheint sie lebendig zu werden. Die Bewegung findet dabei in den Gelenken und in der Wirbelsäule statt. Entscheidend ist die Verschiebung des Schwerpunktes aus der Körpermitte heraus.

Der Eindruck von Bewegung wird noch verstärkt, wenn auch das Haar mitschwingt oder der Mantel sich hebt. So wirkt die Szene wie ein Schnappschuss.
